

Are Separate Schools Equal?

Are separate schools equal? Well our class has done research to find out. The problem with this question is everyone always thinks yes. But I can prove them wrong. Separate schools are not equal because of income, academic choices, and geography.

Depending on whether you do have more or less money, your school could have less educational tools. Some tools are books or pens. The most important tools could be teachers. That is one of the reasons why separate schools are not equal.

Different schools get different choices such as electives. One school could have as many as seven electives when another school could have only two. Some schools could have art and chorus. Some schools could have computer and health. This is another reason why separate schools are not equal.

Depending on where you live you could have more or less opportunities. Some schools may have sport teams, why'll the others only have fieldtrips and no teams. Or the case could be that some schools have soccer teams and some schools have baseball. Or it could be that some schools could go to the zoo, and some could go to the Getty Museum because some people live close to the Getty and some live near the zoo. That is one of the very many reasons to prove that separate schools are not equal.

Because of different geographic areas, different schools offer different opportunities, and because of how much money you have, separate schools cannot be equal. These five paragraphs show and describe how this statement is true. But most of all these paragraphs prove why this statement is true. This is why I believe that separate schools are not equal.
