

Are Separate Schools Equal?

By Stevie

Separate schools are not equal because of students having bigger schools, money, and school activities. Do you think separate schools are equal? I know I have problems in school. I hope by reading this article you will understand why some schools don't match up to other schools. However, if you knew separate schools were not equal, would you still sit there, or would you do something?

I think part of the reason separate schools aren't equal is because of students having bigger schools. It's easier for kids to have ten math classes and six science classes. But, do you think it's really fair? Students in different schools get a better education, I think it's unfair. I know I don't really have a problem with bigger schools, but I know my fellow students are squished in our little rows. The school also says next year there is going to be more students next year. "HELP ME!!!"

Then there's the other fear, money, which is a big problem in schools. I know we have fundraisers, but it just doesn't cut it. I do thank the staff and parents for helping raise money and teachers who pay for supplies with their own money. I just wish all schools could have enough money for everything, so it would make things much easier. Even though schools are doing better with money even though teachers always need a life time of supplies and there is always money for something. I know I take pride in it because the district pays all this money so we can have a good education.

Last, but not least there's school activities, which I think is a big problem. I find that there are no sports and teams for middle schoolers only outside of school. If I recall, I remember the school wanting as much school fitness for the kids as possible. But, they can't seem to show it only by having P.E and High School varsity teams. But, there is a class they're putting in Malibu High next year for middle school which is Drumline that I take now, which I might say totally rocks.

I hope my essay has inspired you as much as possible, by learning that separate schools are not equal. I hope all you people out there do something and go fight for school rights. I know all you people can make a change out there for students like us. In conclusion, I hope you learn separate schools are not equal because of bigger schools, money, and school activities.
