Denying a Human Right

Throughout our history many different people from different places have immigrated to the United States. From the Europeans who first immigrated, to the people all over who now immigrate to the United States. Although we are all different, every person in America is an American. Every student in America deserves equal rights, especially when it comes to an education.

During my own life I believe that I have had the right to go to school. I have been one of the lucky people to have the "equal" right to get an education. I also believe I have this right because of my parents. They came here from Mexico and weren't able to finish their education. My parents had to work in order to live. Because of my parents' hard work, I was then able to get the proper education that everyone deserves. I am able to go to school, instead of having to work. I can focus on my education and not worry about my needs because my parents take care of that for me. I have been given the right to go to school, but not by America. I have been given that right by my parents who worked so hard. But America should be the one to give all students the opportunity to go to school and get an education. They shouldn't have to wait for other people (like their parents) to help them with money. And they should obviously not have to work themselves for the money. When they must do these types of things, they cannot go to school. The American government should provide the financial assistance so that every child can easily go to school. My parents came to America a long time ago and now their kids, their grandchildren, and so on and so forth will have the right to get an education and live a proper life.

There are young people now who immigrate to America who do not have the same right as I have. Some come with their parents and those parents work. But their parents' work is not enough and they must work as well. The fact that they must work takes away the privilege of schooling. They might go to school, but they also have to focus on working. They end up with a bad education (if any at all) because they have to work to live. These students have not been given the same right, as I have to go to school. They do not have equal schooling rights. But they deserve equal rights as the Americans that they are. They are as American as me and any other person in America because they are in America as well. Not only do they live in America; they work for America too. So why are they not getting equal rights? Something is obviously wrong in this picture. They are doing more for America than I am, yet I am more privileged than them. And there are still more Americans who give even more to America, yet get even less.

Some immigrants come alone and have nobody to help them with the needs in life. In their cases they must work in order to live. Because they work, they cannot get any education at all. Once again we see how some give so much to America, yet get nothing in return. The American government should provide All-American students with the money they need so they can go to school. Why can't they get the education they deserve? They are Americans as well as anyone else in America. Ever since they stepped on American soil, they were Americans. Therefore we all deserve the same rights because we are all Americans.

In America, it seem like the more one gives to it, the less one gets back from it. I don't know about everyone else, but it seems to me that this is not right. What we should all be able to say is that the more you give the more you get. But with the American schooling system, that isn't the way it is. In America, nobody is more or less American than anyone else; we are all the same. Therefore everyone should have the same rights, especially with education. Our education is the main thing that will determine our lives. A good education will usually lead to a good life. By denying people the opportunity of a proper education, we are denying them the right to live a proper life. We should not and cannot deny anyone this because it is not only an equal American right, but also an equal human right.
